Rosine Jozef Perelberg

'Love And Melancholia In The Analysis Of Women.'

Speaking from many years of experience of working with women in psychoanalysis, Prof. Perelberg will explore how a woman's primitive tie with her mother, the primary lost object, may be preserved and conveyed through somatic symptoms and anxiety that represent, at the same time, the struggle to establish a separate sense of self. The links between femininity, the irrepresentable and its manifestations in the analyses of women through somatic illness and anxiety will be explored, as well as their transformation into representation through the analyst's countertransference.

Rosine Jozef Perelberg PhD is a training analyst of The British Psychoanalytical Society and Visiting Professor in The Psychoanalysis Unit at UCL. She has worked for many years in The NHS as a senior psychotherapist and family therapist and has written and lectured widely both here and abroad on gender issues, violence, suicide, time and memory. Relevant books include: Joint Editor of 'Female Experience: Four Generations of British Woman Psychoanalysts on Work with Women' (1997); 'Psychoanalytical Understanding of Violence and Suicide' (1998); 'Time Space and Phantasy' (2008).
